relationship that the 478th created and take it to the next level," said Army Maj. W. Brice Finney, commanding officer D Company, 412th Civil Affairs Battalion.

The reserve battalion, headquartered in Whitehall, Ohio, comes to CJTF-HOA with high expectations for the next nine months of their deployment. The battalion is eager to understand what the task force's civil military operations plan is and start executing it, said Army Capt. Randy W. Alden, a team leader for the battalion.

Even though the battalion has been on the African soil for only a little more than a week, numerous four-man civil affairs teams are already hard at work throughout the Horn of Africa. They will continue the projects started by their predecessors and work with many other communities to help increase their quality of life.

"We will be doing more assessments of villages, maintain ongoing projects and continuing to support the task force commander's objectives here," said Alden.

With the turnover of Northern Djibouti, which mainly includes the districts of Tadjoura and Obock, new projects for the region are said to be in the near future. Projects that are expected range anywhere from MEDCAPs and Veterinarian Civic Action Programs to renovations of schools and hospitals.

"A number of projects are going through the nomination process as I speak and one of our jobs here is to nominate more," commented Alden.

With more projects on the way, Hassan commented, "I like the Americans here not just for the medicine, but also for the security we have gained and the other projects that have been completed in the past."
